"Macao was the very first place at which European merchants, missionaries, and travellers found residence in an East Asian place. Over the four hundred sixty plus years, it established itself as a significant joint to connect the west with the east, economically and culturally alike. From the view of old maps, this book will bring back the readers to the history after the westerners sailed to the east, to interpret the interaction took place between the East and West in the early process of globalization."
